BRIEF DESCRIPTION	Luxury 453-room resort situated on five prime oceanfront acres on Waikiki Beach. Comprised of five, low-density buildings ranging in height from two to 17 stories, surrounded by open courtyards and lush gardens. Guest facilities include three restaurants, three cocktail lounges, pool, spa, fitness room, business center, and hospitality suite. In-house laundry and dry cleaning facility, print shop, bakery, florist and five meeting and banquet rooms.
HISTORY	The original Halekulani began in 1907 as a residential hotel called Hau Tree owned by Robert Lewers. It consisted of a beachfront home and five bungalows.

In 1917, Juliet and Clifford Kimball purchased the hotel, gradually expanded it and established it as a stylish resort for wealthy vacationers and named it Halekulani, which means "House Befitting Heaven."

In the 1930s, they tore down the old Lewers home and replaced it with a plantation mansion-styled Main Building with a high-pitched hip roof to catch the cooling trade winds. Also known as the "Dickey" roof, it is a trademark of Hawaii's legendary architect C.W. Dickey.

Following the Kimballs' passing, the Norton Clap family of Seattle bought Halekulani in 1962 with its Main Building and 37 one- and two-story bungalows and sold it in 1981 to Mitsui Fudosan(USA), Inc. which formed the Honolulu-based Halekulani Corporation. The hotel was then closed and the aging bungalows demolished.

Today, the historic Main Building has been restored and retained along with coconut palms and a century-old Kiawe tree in the 453-room Halekulani.
